Dear Dr. McAuliffe:

A short while ago Mr. Newell turned over to us two boxes of coins for us to look over, take some that we might want and try to sell the balance. Roughly figuring, there are about 2300 coins. From these we picked out 142, chiefly of the small foreign pieces, that are not represented in our collection and which we would like to have. Mr. Newell said you would be glad to present these coins to us. The value roughly of these is about $8.75. Of the remainder we would be glad to send a large number of these to be sold at auction and get what we can for them. Quite a large proportion, however, would not pay to send to a sale as they would bring nothing. These we can either sell over the counter or simply cash in at one of the many brokers. As a matter of fact we have sold over $30.00 this way, getting more than trying to sell at auction with the commission deducted. I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

Dear Dr. McAuliffe:

Under separate cover we are sending you an auction catalogue. On page 41 are your coins that we are selling. The rest of the coins that were not worth sending we have sold the best we could.
